2. Business Model

2. Business Model

The company operates a hybrid product-and-services platform that blends internally-developed software with a curated portfolio of third-party hardware and software. This structure allows it to address the full technology stack required by government and large-enterprise customers while maintaining flexibility to capture upside from both product licensing and professional services.

Below we break the model into three logical layers – Offerings, Revenue Streams, and Value Capture Mechanisms – and illustrate how they inter-relate.

Layer	Key Elements	Description	Strategic Rationale
Offerings	• Proprietary software (in-house R&D) • Third-party hardware (e.g., networking, IoT devices) • Third-party software (licensed platforms, SaaS add-ons)	• Core IP that differentiates the brand and drives high-margin licensing. • Hardware sold as “turn-key” bundles to meet compliance or

4. Objects & Promoters

4. Objects & Promoters

Item	Details
Objects of Issue	The net proceeds from the offer are earmarked for three strategic pillars that underpin the Company’s growth trajectory.
1. Capital Expenditure (CapEx)	• Modernisation of existing product lines – replacement of legacy equipment, automation of key processes, and integration of Industry 4.0 technologies. • Redevelopment of under-utilised assets to improve capacity utilisation and reduce unit cost.
2. Working Capital	• Augmentation of inventory buffers to meet anticipated demand spikes. • Expansion of trade receivables financing to support a larger dealer network. • Strengthening of cash conversion cycles to sustain day-to-day operations.
3. Inorganic Growth	• Targeted acquisitions of complementary businesses (e.g., niche product manufacturers, technology platforms). • Strategic joint-ventures or minority stakes that accelerate market entry into high-growth segments.

5. Risks & Litigation

5. Risks & Litigation

Risk Category	Key Drivers (as disclosed in the RHP)	Potential Impact on Business	Mitigation / Management Actions
Internal Risk Factors	1. Reliance on Competitive Bidding & Government Tenders – ~ 89.4% of the company's project pipeline is sourced through competitive bids, the majority of which are government-issued tenders. 2. Concentration of Revenue – A small number of large contracts generate a disproportionate share of turnover. 3. Project Execution Capability – Execution timelines, cost overruns, and quality compliance are tied to the firm's ability to mobilise resources quickly.	• Revenue volatility if tender success rates fall. • Cash-flow pressure from delayed award or payment cycles. • Reputation risk from project delays or cost overruns,

7. Final Verdict

Final Verdict – SRIT India Ltd. (Mainboard) IPO

Recommendation

Buy / Subscribe – the IPO is priced attractively relative to market sentiment, and the strong grey-market premium (~16-17% above the upper price band) signals robust investor appetite. The company's hybrid software-plus-services model, its focus on high-growth verticals (retail, logistics, fintech) and a clear capital-allocation plan (CapEx modernization, working-capital expansion, and targeted inorganic growth) provide a compelling growth narrative that justifies a subscription
